ED KREVIT
Chief Deputy

Freelinc,

More and more peace officers are struggling with the technical demands of cordless communication while working their normal duties. Different types of communication dates back to the earlier half of the twentieth century and they are woefully behind when it comes to providing the kind of support that is now expected and required by law enforcement personnel. Organizations have now discovered that cordless radio microphone systems are available. Cordless radio microphone have thrived for one important reason: eliminating the microphone cable connections giving officers more flexibility and mobility in their jobs.

Choosing a wireless microphone system is really a series of choices relating to the individual components (input device, transmitter, and receiver) that make up the system, and their suitability for your specific application. I'm using a device which covers all expectation required by law enforcement.

I'm employed with Midland County Sheriff's Office Patrol Division and have the best cordless microphone available. Approximately two years prior, we received a Free Mic 200 - Cordless Speaker Microphone from Freelinc for our two-way radios. Since being issued this piece of equipment, I have experienced extreme delight and satisfaction with this product. Not having a cord, from your two-way radio and microphone, has allowed easier movement and freedom with every day duties. I worked every shift while using the Freelinc system and never encountered any problems. The clarity and functions have been essential with my job. Freelinc has designed a microphone which is rugged and durable for every day activities. The system has been put through a strenuous test during the time Free Mic 200 was issued.

In my past experiences, during an arrest with an intoxicated individual, a fight erupted. During the fight, the subject grabbed my old microphone cord and attempted to use it against me. If I had the Free Mic 200 from Freelinc, this would not have been an issue.

Sincerely,
Sgt. Donald Graham
